Toronto Carpet Factory

The history of the Toronto Carpet Factory begins with the company whose name it retains, the Toronto Carpet Manufacturing Company Limited. The building was constructed at the turn of the last century to house the rapidly growing carpet company. By the end of the First World War, the factory occupied one city block and employed over 1,000 people. The buildings are similar in architecture to other industrial buildings being built in Britain and the U.S. during that time. They were constructed in the classic 19th century style of perimeter buildings forming a cloister around a central quadrangle and powerhouse. All of the buildings are of heavy timber construction with load-bearing brick walls, timber columns and beams, and hardwood floors.

Four-Acres, One City Block

For over a century these buildings have been places for creating. Though the products that originate here have radically changed over the years, the complex continues to provide spaces that inspire new ideas and ambitious companies.

Today, the entire city block has been designated as a property of historical and architectural value under the Ontario Heritage Act. The buildings have been beautifully restored and are now home to 100 businesses.
