RARE FREESTANDING BUILDING IN THE DOWNTOWN CORE

Rare opportunity to own a freestanding building in Toronto's downtown core.

A BUILDING WITH HISTORY

A rare surviving late-19th century three-storey commercial building that housed the first Grand and Toy store, and for the past 50 years has been the location of Tom Jones Steakhouse.

City of Toronto Archives, Fonds 1526, Item 97

INCREDIBLE SURROUNDING DENSITY

The highly centralized location, access to abundant amenities and rapid population growth have propelled Toronto's Downtown East into the most active condo & office development node.

SHADOW ANCHORED BY GOOGLE HEADQUARTERS

Currently under construction, 65 King East will be the new home to Google's 400,000 sq. ft. headquarters.

LOCATION OVERVIEW

Located in the heart of Downtown East, 40 Colborne Street is surrounded by iconic Toronto points-of-interests, unmatched transit infrastructure, urban amenities and high population density. Proximity to key employment nodes including the Financial Core, government offices, hospital districts, Ryerson University and George Brown College, enables the neighbourhood to attract a high concentration of young professionals, new graduates and students in addition to the diverse and significant that traffic gravitates to the downtown core during the day.

Located where the Financial Core and St. Lawrence Market neighbourhood meet, the area is uniquely characterized by older brick-and-beam commercial assets situated amongst a number of recently complete and currently under construction residential buildings and high-profile office developments. Most notable is 65 King East, currently under construction directly next door to 40 Colborne. This 18 storey office building features 400,000 sq. ft. of office space, 100% leased to Google.

Given the rapid pace of population growth and influx in investment and residential/office development activity, this area of Downtown Toronto remains the City's focal point for real estate.
